Current Research

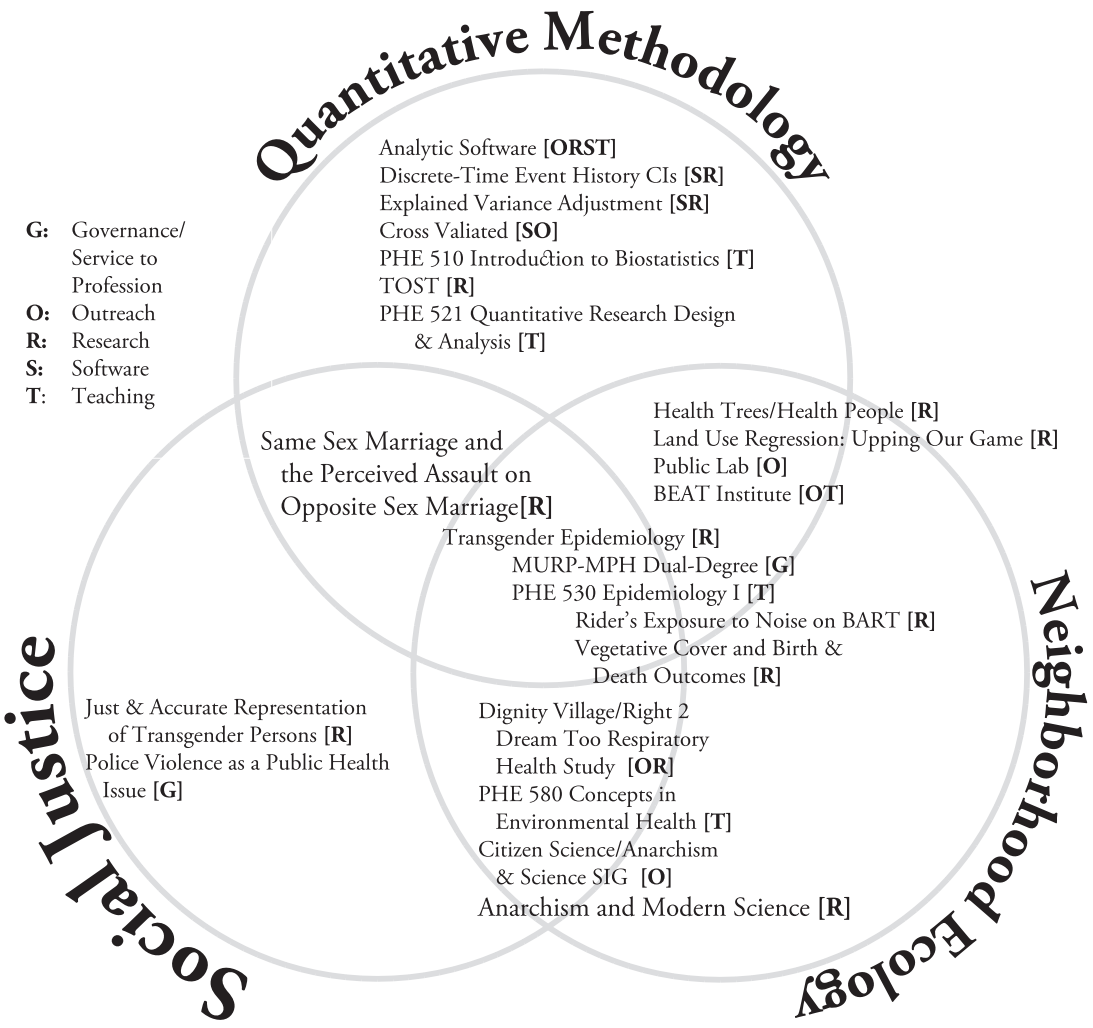
Alexis Dinno
Associate Professor
School of Public Health
Portland State University
Oregon Health & Science University

June 14, 2016

alexis.dinno@pdx.edu
(503) 725-3076

Where my interests lie…

Science! Because a better world is possible.



Some current opportunities for collaboration 1

- Portland Metro transgender health care services survey
  How well do Portland transgender individuals have access to health care?
  Is health care access affected by experiences of anti-transgender discrimination?

  Scope of work: data collection, management, assistance with data analysis

- National transgender health cohort
  What are the most common illnesses and causes of death in transgender individuals?
  What transgender-specific determinants of health increase or decrease health risks for transgender individuals?

  Scope of work: systematic literature review and synthesis, grant writing, research protocol writing

Some current opportunities for collaboration 2

- Portland houseless and homeless respiratory health study
  What are Portland houseless and homeless respiratory health experiences?
  Do these experiences differ by settlement location?

  Scope of work: local non-academic literature review, funding exploration, developing future projects, collaborative writing with community partners

Students working with me

My aim in working with you is to (a) achieve our research aims, (b) develop your research skills, and (c) help you discover where your self-image fits with my small corner of research.

- By arrangement independent study/course credit

- Commit to a clear articulation of expected student products
  As examples, current and past student collaborators have: assisted in grant writing, writing articles for publication in scholarly journals as coauthors, data analysis and presentation, formal literature review

- Weekly research meetings, communication by e-mail

- Mentored in research work-flow, including file management, collaborative communication, research skills